LEF&CO
LUNCH | DINER | BORREL

DEAR GUEST

May I ask you, during your time at our establishment, LEF & CO, to take a moment to reflect on this place? You are standing on historic ground, rich with a fascinating past.

On June 11, 1231, the Duke van Gelre granted Harderwijk city rights. Situated on the shores of the former Zuiderzee, Harderwijk was a strategic location for overseas trade. A city also required a city wall, which was constructed on the landward side around the year 1300. In our cellars, you can still see remains of the city wall on the seaside, dating back to around 1330. If you happen to visit the restrooms in the basement, take a moment to observe this historic wall!

Duke Karel van Gelre struggled to maintain control over the city and ordered the construction of a residence for the drost, his representative in power.

In 1539, work began on a real coercion castle (dwangburcht). A section was built adjacent to the city, fully enclosed by walls, with a moat separating the city from the fortress. This area stretched from the current town hall to the two bridges right outside in front of LEF & CO.

The very spot where your chair is placed once held this fortress—an imposing stronghold with casemates and towers, where the Duke positioned cannons toward the sea to defend the city against enemies.

In 1581, the fortress was demolished, but large sections remained preserved underground, as proven by remarkable archaeological discoveries.

In 2022, before and during the demolition of the predecessor of LEF & CO, an archaeological excavation was conducted. Remnants of the fortress, the city wall, casemates, and the Peelen Gate were unearthed. Additionally, the cesspit of the main building was discovered and examined, revealing insights into the luxurious goods the residents owned and what they ate: meat, fish (haddock, whiting, cod, herring, eel, etc.), fruit (plums, berries, blackberries, grapes, etc.), and grains. It was truly a place of fine dining!

So, your chair is placed on historic ground—a place where the struggle between the city and the ruler unfolded, and where battles against the sea were also fought. During the Eighty Years' War (1568–1648), the city managed to break free from Spanish rule, leading to the demolition of the fortress.

I wish you a pleasant stay at LEF & CO.
